Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The authors introduce the need for revitalization of public administration and propose solutions to improve its effectiveness. The recommendations presented are highly interesting but very similar to the research findings.

The introduction is too long and focuses more on a broader context, so the research does not give enough background. It is advisable to write a "literature review" section separately. Too many topics are included in the introduction, so adding subheadings would enhance the comprehension of the arguments presented.

The authors declare that the research methodology for this study included a combination of literature review, qualitative analysis, and expert interviews. The article would highly improve if the results of each methodology were presented separately in the results section and then convergently in the conclusions section. I consider that the "research findings" are more appropriate for the conclusions section.
