1. In the abstract, explain about your findings instead of methods.
2. Rewrite the abstract more precisely and focus on your findings and methods explained in one or two lines.
3. The authors need to explain where exactly the study focuses and any particular group of people in a paragraph or two.
4. The methodology needs to be written precisely, and the Results need to be separately mentioned. The use of I, we in scientific article need to avoid.
5. The conclusion is sound.
6. The overall article is good; however, minor changes are required to go for publication. Authors need to focus on the constructive narration of the article.
