Issues to Address

* Introduction:

The introduction needs more references and studies to provide strong or fresh arguments to convince the reader of the need for this research beyond what we already know about the benefits of TPD.

* The research questions:

The research needs to determine specific questions to be answered.

* Literature Review:

The author could strengthen his literature review by discussing more in-depth analysis of literature. He needs to add more related research in TPD and clarify the strengths and weaknesses of the previous studies, identify key shortcomings in the research base, and explain how his study is designed to address these shortcomings.

* Methodology:

The author didn't present details about his procedures or the nature of the interview process, sample, or compared PD programs.

He needs to write in-depth explanations from each table.

* Discussion and conclusion:

The author could strengthen this section by using theory to interpret his findings, by identifying limitations of his analysis, and by discussing in more detail the implications for future research.
