

Review of: "Participatory budgeting for public involvement in environmental sustainability at a Thai university"

John Loomis¹

¹ Universidade Positivo (UP)

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I found the paper to be interesting and timely. There are several improvements that need to be made before it could be published, these are detailed in the attached word doc review. Here is a list of general comments to be considered by the author:

- The structure needs to more closely adhere to the traditional introduction, methods, results, and discussion (IMRAD) article structure;
- Please improve your literature review as it is currently shallow to present a brief state of the art about participatory democracy, sustainability in higher education, and the methods used;
- The discussion should interact with the literature reviewed and currently does not do so, how do your results inform the current body of literature; and
- There is no conclusion section.

I believe attending these revisions in addition to those in the word document will significantly improve the paper.

Thank you for the opportunity to review this work.