

Review of: "Diversity and Inclusion for Innovation-Led Growth"

Sidhartha Harichandan¹

¹ Rajiv Gandhi Institute of Petroleum Technology

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article effectively introduces the concept of India's transformative period, Amrit Kaal, and its goal of becoming a fully developed nation by 2047. It also establishes a connection between innovation-led growth and the importance of diversity and inclusion. The article effectively highlights the need for India to transition from an economy driven by investment to one driven by innovation. This shift is crucial for achieving the goal of becoming a fully developed nation. To strengthen this point, it would be helpful to include some statistics or examples illustrating India's current economic landscape and how innovation can positively impact the nation's growth. Overall, the article is promising and covers an essential topic. With some additional research and elaboration on specific points, it can become a compelling and insightful piece.