The research topic undoubtedly deserves the attention and interest of the scientific community, but this work is poorly conceived and lacks methodological rigor.

Starting with the theoretical framework, poor in scientific references and empirical work, the article does not follow the common structure of a research process.

It is recommended to fully elaborate the work, setting out an objective, a hypothesis or research questions to be solved, a method to achieve this end/ends and a detailed explanation of the scientific procedure. Subsequently, an exposition of the results in accordance with these objectives and a discussion that relates the theory to the results achieved are invited.

Also, I have serious doubts about the first part of the topic statement, it doesn't seem human. Has artificial intelligence been used for its wording? There is a succession of paragraphs spun in an unnatural way, correctly, but without a connection that facilitates a fluid reading and with really relevant, differentiating content.
