

Review of: "Exploring factors explaining the scarcity of climate protests in East Asia"

Norhafiza Mohd Hed<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Universiti Pendidikan Sultan Idris

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Overall, this article makes a useful contribution to existing literature, and the authors makes the case for its inclusion very well. The strength of the article is mostly in the novelty of the study and the contribution it makes to broader knowledge. However, it has some minor shortcomings, but can be improved and that not limit its possibility of being published.

1. Abstract is well written, but please provide explanations on methodological approach and impacts of the research.
2. The authors provide a clear on this issue, however, it is better to also include the case study or example of climate protest in East Asia in the introduction.
3. The authors provide very clear explanations for theoretical framework, however, I suggest that the authors should make a clear logical connection between the theory and this study.
4. The selection of research methodology is suitable to achieve the objective, however, details explanations on samples are required.
5. The article presents data that supplements the knowledge and rich findings on climate protests from a less studied region.