When it comes to providing an overview of Turkey's overall predicament, the author has done a fine job. That being said, the suggestions that were made for the fix are well-known ones. The recommendations are sound, however I kindly request that you clarify the serious impediments that prevent them from being implemented immediately. I believe it is imperative to disclose the financial and human resources that will be employed in order to carry out these suggestions. Furthermore, the province-based rice cultivation map creates the illusion that rice growing is being done over very wide areas. It would be better to correct this. To sum up, it was a helpful overview of the material, but I didn't see anything really novel.
