Present case study is good work and can be considered further. The only thing I would like to ask the authors is

- Can you suggest specific diagnostic tests or criteria the authors could use to strengthen their claim that prednisolone is the cause?
- Are there any alternative explanations or factors that the authors should consider and address in their discussion?
- The study reports that the patient was having the problem of gingival enlargement for 6 years and the duration of medication was not more than 1 year. Kindly explain the reason for considering only prednisolone as the key factor for gingival enlargement.
