

Review of: "Toxic Leadership Leads to White-Collar Crimes in Autonomous Higher Education Institutions"

Rofiq Noorman Haryadi

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article offers a critical examination of how toxic leadership in higher education can lead to white-collar crimes. By analyzing 30 cases from five autonomous institutions, the study identifies the detrimental effects of toxic leaders who misuse their authority for personal gain. This behavior not only undermines the integrity and performance of educational institutions but also hampers the development of outstanding faculty and innovative programs. The study underscores the need for robust strategies and ethical leadership to combat these issues effectively.