

Review of: "Examining the Ethical and Geopolitical Context of Global Food Security Policy"

Bakri Mat<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Universiti Utara Malaysia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Vojtěch Mašek's piece "Examining the Ethical and Geopolitical Context of Global Food Security Policy" critically analyses a Dublin City University report. The review considers several key factors, including the report's title, feasibility of ending the food security crisis, multi-stakeholder approach, and involvement of churches and faith groups. The author discusses the connection between food rights, civic liberties, and democracy. Mašek emphasises the good link between food access and the global market economy.

Throughout the review, the author stresses the importance of a realistic and ethical approach to global food security, questioning the report's ideas' feasibility and ethical implications. The discussion also questions the report's treatment of geopolitical issues, including disarmament and the security dangers brought by Russia's war in Ukraine.

From a technical aspect, the paper is well-organized and expressed, with a formal and scholarly tone suitable for its subject. The author uses a number of sources to back up his assessment, exhibiting an understanding of both the subject matter and the greater context of global food security.

One of the article's strengths is its in-depth analysis. The article challenges the report's assumptions and suggestions, questioning their viability and ethical effects. This thoroughness raises the critique's legitimacy.

Mašek praises the report's scope but criticises its approach to food security, arguing for a more comprehensive, practical, and ethical plan.

Overall, the article is a strong scholarly critique that offers a detailed and thought-provoking study of Dublin City University's report. Its thorough assessment of the ethical and geopolitical aspects of global food security policy makes it an important contribution to the topic.