

Review of: "Collective Guilt and the Search for Meaning in Post-Communist Albania: An Existential Perspective"

Frans P. Rumbi

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article is excellent. However, I believe the authors should add the following:

1. The authors of this paper need to provide an overview of communism in Albania in the introduction. Which actions do they undertake that result in wounds?
2. Does a collective guilt give rise to collective shame?
3. Does a collective guilt only affect the leaders? How about the people, the victims? How did their communist experience influence them?
4. How do memories influence the behavior of individuals in the present? How does the development of a community affect the formation of ideas?
5. The author must elucidate the values and significance formed during meaning-making.

Thank you.