This article is accurate since glycemic control within the appropriate parameters allows a reduction in future complications and a better quality of life for people with this condition.

There are specific considerations left below that are necessary to review:

1. an inclusive language for this condition currently refers to "people with diabetes" and not a "diabetic person." There are multiple paragraphs in this appears.
2. Regarding the citations related to the American Diabetes Association, they do not correspond to the references broken down at the end of the document. This discrepancy is in quotes 3, 4, 5, and 20.
3. It is necessary to use generic names for the medications mentioned in the summary table; they should not use trade names.
