

Review of: "The Disruption of the COVID-19 Pandemic on Farm Produce and its Implications for the Future of Food Security - A review"

Bishnu Pandit

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article 'The Disruption of the COVID-19 Pandemic on Farm Produce and its Implications for the Future of Food Security - A review' is a great contribution to the current global food crisis created by COVID-19 pandemic.

Congratulations to all authors who have picked up the today's burning issues and addressed them quite effectively. The authors are successful in documenting the COVID-19's effects on the future of food security. However, this review could have more robust and effective if the authors had documented on how to make the nations, especially the developing ones, self-resilient on food production in future. Specific recommendations are lacking. For example, authors have very nicely stated as to how flood threatened rice production had impacted on food security in the region, but failed to highlight the implementable action plan to overcome from such disasters. There is still room to start another contribution. The framework (Figure 3) is general, needs specific and implementable action plan.