The paper is very interesting, well- and clearly written, showing the author's great knowledge regarding the subject. While there are no major issues with the article, it could be improved by a better division into the theoretical and the practical/conceptual part, e.g. by putting the various theories, approaches and ideas the author introduces throughout the text together (also making it clear to which understanding of collective memory they subscribe), and only then moving to the fascinating analysis of the case of Northern Nigeria.
