The current research has good potential. However, the work needs more maturity and improvements in terms of execution.

1. First of all, the beginning of the abstract should contain a statement about the research problem or question, along with enough background or context for readers to understand why the problem is important. Your findings should then be presented as an answer to the question.
2. The "introduction" part fails to focus on the main research question/subject matter of the work in an effective way.
3. The authors did not explain their abbreviations.
4. There are some sources not mentioned in the reference list.
5. The titles of the tables are missing and the numbering is incorrect.
