

Review of: "Viburnum: an overview in relation to risks of allergy"

Sabyasachi Banerjee

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

It seems to be a very short manuscript after the revised version. Though it contains data related to the allergy-forming ability of Viburnum, it's not critically made. The references cited are very few. Moreover, under results, the authors have described many species with their allergy-forming capacity but have not cited any research. The mechanism was not described. There should be a reference cited in each row of table 1. The introduction part needs to be elaborated with a few more pieces of information. I think a discussion part could be added before the conclusion to elaborate each aspect of the outcomes in detail. There should be a reference cited for each introductory part of each species where the plant descriptions are mentioned.