the topic is very relevant and pertinent at the present point of time. the need for the study is justified.

the literature review is also adequate.

the methodology is sound but it needs to be clarified on which criteria the 32 hospitals were chosen in this paper and largely in India accessibility is seen from the perspective of a person with mobility impairment. the RPD Act 2016 specifies universal access which means for people with a range of disabilities. as the information was not sought the same data was not made available to the researchers. May be there is need to clarify this in the beginning of the paper

With some corrections the paper should be published. it is an important contribution to the mapping of services for persons with disabilities in India
