

Review of: "Either you know or you've gotta believe"

Theofanis Aravanis

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This is a nice and well-written philosophical paper, in which the author argues that knowledge and belief are two separate notions, and that neither of which can be defined in terms of the other. It is also argued that a belief is a more complex concept than knowledge, since the former requires further conditions than the latter, most of all agent's actions.

Overall, I think that this is an interesting contribution that offers to the debate on the nature of knowledge and belief.
