Exceptional work in the field of health inequalities. The authors can discuss the present status of the USA regarding a digital republic and the challenges ahead to build. Does it fit well to compare with a Northern European Country, Estonia, as the USA has a much higher population density, social instability, wealth and related inequalities? Does the recommendation of creating one-stop accommodation contradict the concepts of building a digital republic, and how much the disadvantaged citizens will support it? Need to be explained well. I have not found anything about the methodology of the paper. Otherwise an excellent piece of work.
