The article deals with a number of very important topics regarding the organization of care for people in advanced age. As a source of information, it is a set of basic data, but it certainly does not exhaust this broad and, in the long term, complicated topic.

First of all, attention should be paid to the fact that the organization of care for seniors differs depending on the country or even geographical region, and in order to introduce the proposed changes, it is necessary to know local regulations, which are not discussed in detail here.

To sum up, the article deals with very important issues, but it should not be treated as an exhaustive publication. Further analyzes should be carried out focused on the organizational situation in healthcare in individual countries.
