The article offers a comprehensive overview of the issue of Unaccounted for Water (UFW) and presents various strategies proposed to address this problem. However, there are a few points to consider:

- The title of the article should be written in a better way.
- The methodology and results should be mentioned in the abstract section. Avoid using abbreviations in this section.
- It is expected that more comprehensive and annotated images and maps be used in the article.
- The criteria used for selecting the pilot area and the anticipated challenges and opportunities specific to that area should be stated.
- The references are very old and should be included in the text of the article.

This article lacks specific criteria for a scientific paper and requires a comprehensive revision in all sections.
