

Review of: "Social context of the brain and law: Is consciousness social?"

Arthur Pletcher

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Helpful pros:

- 1) The subjects of free-will, culpability and causality are becoming increasingly very relevant in society, as well as in various fields of science.
- 2) The author approaches his review from a very broad range of disciplines, as the human mind had a great many theoretical cognitive models, and he seems to have demonstrated his expertise across multiple disciplines.
- 3) The author's logic and analysis is very impressive, and simple to follow.
- 4) The author's citations represent a large variety of different research, which solidly support his assertions.
- 5) I very much like how the author makes important distinctions in aspects of conscious decision making.

Constructive suggestions:

If it's possible, I would add a numerical link to the footnotes, and references.

I might consider breaking some of the large paragraphs into smaller ones.

Depending on the journal's requirement's, consider capitalizing the main words in the subtitles.

Very Good!