Abstract: The abstract needs to be rewritten; it looks more like a report, with no background and a lack of key data.

Introduction: This part spends too much time introducing the research background, and the content related to this research topic is not rich enough. The author needs to consult more references to provide theoretical support for the research topic. Ask the author to reorganize the section.

"For example, a laboratory experiment conducted in the Alborz Mountains of northern Iran...". In this paragraph, it is necessary to look for more references to provide research arguments.

"Despite numerous experiments, there is an essential need for comprehensive research to address uncertainties in soil amendment effects." The author introduces the research topic too hastily and persuasively. Please consider it carefully.

"In summary, this research aims to: ...". Among the three research objectives, the author mentioned soil erosion. Please specify the specific indicators of soil erosion in this study.

Fig. 4 should be revised. It has poor clarity. In addition, please pay attention to some words that are underlined in red.
