- Briefly mention the sample size and the main conclusions to make the abstract more transparent.
 - The introduction could be more focused on the specific aims of the study.

Introduction

- Terms like "cisgender" and "transgender" should be defined more clearly for readers who might not be familiar with them.
- Social Acceptance of Transgender People
 - The section could explore more about how social exclusion affects transgender people mentally and emotionally.
 - Adding specific examples or case studies could make the discussion more relatable.

 - The section should take a closer look at how effective these policies really are.
 - Offer suggestions for how to improve the situation or suggest areas for future research.

Research Gap and Significance

The paper identifies a gap in research by focusing on female stakeholders' views, which is unique.

- The potential impact of this study on other similar societies could be discussed more.
- The choice to focus only on female stakeholders should be better justified.

Research Methodology

- Discuss any potential biases or limitations in the sampling process to strengthen the study's credibility.
- Including more statistical data to support the qualitative findings would be good.

Recommendations for Improving Social Acceptance and Educational Opportunities

- The paper could include a more detailed plan for how to implement the recommendations.
- Suggestions on how to measure whether these recommendations are working would be useful.

Conclusion

- Provide a clear set of steps or a roadmap based on the study's findings.
- Discuss how the study could impact national policy or educational reform in a broader sense.
