It is an interesting and current article that highlights the effort of the WHO to sensitize the population about the importance of vaccines and vaccination, especially in people at risk such as health workers. It would be interesting to point out the barriers that may exist to achieve high coverage in health personnel (lack of knowledge, lack of availability, others), in order to develop strategies to reverse them.

The second sentence of the second paragraph is repeated with the first paragraph. It is enough to point out in the first paragraph that it takes place the last week of April and it should be added that it is a WHO campaign. In table 1 in Mumps and Rubella, first column, the sentence ends in "or"...with nothing after it.

Congratulations to the authors because their work is a contribution to public health.
