

Peer Review

Review of: "Sustainability in the Hotel Sector: A Research Study in Greece"

Shahbaz Sharif<sup>1</sup>

1. Minhaj University Lahore, Pakistan

The abstract provides a concise overview, and its alignment with the study's objectives is clear and well-structured.

The introduction effectively highlights the significance of sustainability in the Greek hotel sector and sets a strong foundation for the study.

The post-COVID sustainability section connects global trends with local implications, making it highly relevant and timely.

The discussion on energy efficiency is well-articulated and emphasizes the importance of adopting sustainable practices in the sector.

Waste management initiatives are discussed comprehensively, aligning well with circular economy principles.

The section on water conservation highlights critical sustainability efforts and their relevance to resource management.

Guest engagement strategies are well-presented, showcasing how hotels can involve travelers in sustainability efforts.

The study's connection to the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals is clear and provides a strong global context.

The use of case studies and surveys ensures a robust methodology, supporting the study's findings effectively.

The recommendations are practical and actionable, offering valuable insights for stakeholders in the Greek hotel sector.

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.