The researchers tackle a very pertinent issue affecting parents, health workers, and healthcare managers in LMICs. It is concisely written, providing relevant published literature to strengthen their arguments. They should review the sentence 'Women were satisfied with the kind of available at the hospital' and add 'food,' which is currently missing. It is also difficult to draw generalisations from two participants per category, despite the researchers indicating they reached saturation. It would be good to know if they had planned for a larger sample than this. Perhaps, they should recommend conducting similar research with more numbers and also using focus group discussions as well.
