

Review of: "Evaluation of the effectiveness of the collegiate system of administration at Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology, Ghana"

Lukas Shikulo

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is well structured, attained its objectives of finding out if the collegiate system of administration is effective at KNUST and more importantly, it provides recommendations to the identified challenges. Not only that the chosen topic was well explained and adds value to the existing literature but the evaluation exercise for any program/system highlights the importance of reviewing programs/systems after some years of implementation for improvement purposes. While the consulted literature provides the basic status of the same system at other universities, the recommendations are sound towards improving the system for maximum functionality at KNUST. The authors can improve on methodology just to provide some clarity. I would propose the main questions from the questionnaire be included for readers to understand the six points about the effectiveness of the system. It would also be of interest to justify the chosen method used for this study. Similarly, reference should be made on how the chi-square was used.

Besides few pointed shortcomings, the article has some level of novelty and can be published after considering some comments.