

Review of: "Who Is Responsible for Preventing Children's Sexual Harassment?"

Mohammad Efendi¹

¹ State University of Malang

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Review of Who Is Responsible for Preventing Children's Sexual Harassment? :

1- The topic discussed in this research is currently a trending topic. To explain this phenomenon, researchers, apart from displaying empirical data on incidents of child sexual abuse, must also reveal more deeply about the determinants of the factors that trigger sexual harassment.

2- In the introduction section, the researcher only conveys the phenomenon of sexual abuse among children in the researcher's own perception without being supported by the results of previous research, especially references research that can strengthen cases of sexual harassment in Indonesia which are already at an alarming level.

3-Support for theories related to behavioral mechanisms that lead to the growth and development of sexual harassment behavior as a starting point for exploring this phenomenon more deeply is very limited.

4- In the research methods section, the researcher has not explained specifically how this research procedure was carried out. It is best to describe research methods in the form of a matrix that is easy to understand, and supported by reading sources about the latest research methodology.

5- References used to back up each important part of this article need to be updated in terms of quality and relevance to the research.