I'm a current student of Triorigin, and I can understand how much effort is needed to explain this detail for eye sty treatment. I greatly appreciate your time in sharing the results. It helps to a greater extent for all those who have similar issues and also for current students in enhancing their knowledge.

When it comes to meibomian gland blockage, can the treatment stated here be applied for a lower eyelid sty too?

Can you please suggest whether this treatment helps with chronic chalazion too? Please provide additional information, such as the time period during which the patient can do the colour therapy. What is the minimum and maximum number of hours that the colour can be applied to the hand?

How would you treat a patient if they have chalazion on both eyes?

Regarding the picture, there are sequences listed on both the right and left hand. You have mentioned that the patients are right-handed and that the actual therapy was done on the right hand. Adding the sequence of the hand will add more clarity for learners and patients.

Thanks
