

Review of: "Conflict Resolution Applications to Peace Studies"

Esther Oreofeoluwa Esho¹

¹ Universidade Fernando Pessoa

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is lacking in a number of different areas. To begin, the author suggests conducting a comprehensive study that addresses conflict resolution in the context of peace studies. This study would investigate the crucial role that mediation and negotiation play in conflict resolution, and it would meticulously analyze how these two approaches align with the fundamental principles of peace studies. The author also promised to present a case study, but this study did not include a case study. The techniques, as well as the organization and analysis, are not quite obvious. In addition, the literature review is not solid and adequate, and the study does not contain any innovative contributions. I suggest that the author simplify the thoughts and reconstruct the entire work in order to improve the reader's ability to comprehend and engage with the material.