Engaging article about the relevant and very interesting topic of "borders and boundaries", easily readable and with a well documented starting point. It sets its goals and methodology right from the beginning and sticks to the purpose of proposing a betterment for the object area.

However, the proposal-conclusions presented remain slightly ungrounded since the reasoning behind them is too succinct. Moreover, the relation of the conclusions with the borders/boundaries topic presented at the beginning gets diluted by the end of the article. A bigger number illustrations -pictures, graphic analysis, schemes- and/or a better developed explanation may have helped this link to be more clear.
