Overall, analysis of the "Family Management and Lifestyle" textbook is thorough and provides valuable insights into the underlying attitudes and perspectives towards women and girls. However, it reads more like a thesis and less like a research article. Trim excessive details and streamline language for clarity. Focus on the most impactful components that underscore the central argument.

Here are some points for the entire text:

Consider revisiting your research statement to make it more explicit. Clearly state your main argument and how your analysis contributes to answering the research question. The Background is too long and diverse; make it focused on the research statement. Instead of delving into individual studies, condense it and focus on the key aspects from the studies reviewed.

Condense your theoretical framework and Methodology. The list of extracted components can be reduced or given as supplementary material.

Analysis/Results needs to be very succinct. Focus on key components that reveal the textbook's perspective on girlhood identity, women's roles, and marriage. Highlight specific instances, like associating girlhood with weakness and emphasizing traditional family roles.

Clearly establish connections between the textbook's content and relevant upstream documents or legal frameworks.

Emphasize how the depicted gender roles contribute to an identity crisis among girls, referencing external studies for support.

The Conclusion is too long. Summarize findings concisely, underlining the importance of reevaluating educational materials to align with modern perspectives.
