

Review of: "Covid-19 and Transitional Time Objects"

Rida Afrilyasanti<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> State University of Malang

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article's topic is intriguing. The article in inquiry is beneficial in the realm of teletherapy. Some findings in the paper appear compelling, particularly to a reader who is not a recognised expert in psychoanalytics. Even though it transpires in Covid-19, the discussion transcends universal. Furthermore, while the abstract offers information about its key topics and aims, it lacks further details on study methods, range of samples, and concrete findings. This renders determining the research's strength more challenging.

Indeed, some adjustments are needed. The writers should create a thorough literature review with relevant references, include theories to support their claims, and include details regarding the research methodologies used. Although clinical examples and narratives are presented, this is considered a severe flaw in the article.