

Peer Review

Review of: "Bridging the Language Divide in UK Paramedic Care: An Atomic Article Reviewing Challenges, Strategies, and Emerging Innovations"

Marie Jelínková¹

1. Charles University Prague, Czech Republic

The article introduces an important topic. However, it is not clear from the article what new information it brings. A scholarly article should either carry out a meta-analysis of studies on the topic or bring some new findings of its own. The article, while important on the topic, does neither. At this stage, it is more of a summary introduction that could be followed up with, for example, research with rescue workers. At the same time, the article focuses only on the situation in the UK; if it concludes that the continuing situation is problematic, it offers to look for experiences from other countries (or parts of countries) where the problem might be better addressed. My encouragement to the author is to continue the good work and either focus on the necessary research or continue to complete the meta-analysis.

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.