

Review of: "A Balance Between Tradition and Innovation: A Review of Teaching Methodologies in Modern Sunday Schools"

Esther H. Kuntjara¹

¹ Universitas Kristen Petra

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I like the idea of balancing the traditional and the innovative approaches in teaching Sunday school children. I believe it should not only be applied in a Sunday School but in other public schools as well. However, I expected that the author could provide some practical ways of how to integrate the traditional and the innovative, which the author has hopefully applied in her Sunday School. For instance, some examples of how local cultural factors may affect the execution of the integrative approach may be shared to reveal the difficulty the teacher may face when preparing to teach using the new approach, or how advanced technology nowadays can help children absorb the meaning of faith in their religious lives better and at the same time make learning fun for children. I believe such practical examples may inspire teachers to develop their own approaches.