

Review of: "Lexico-Syntactic Study of English Usage in Online News Responses and Their Implications for 21st-Century Pedagogy"

Cigdem Hursen¹

¹ Near East University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

It is recommended that researchers discuss the problem situation of the research in more detail. It is especially recommended that the study be supported with current literature.

The importance of the study and its contribution to the field should be clearly stated.

It is recommended that researchers improve the literature review section they write and include studies conducted in the last 3 years.

The method part of the research is quite weak. The research model, study group, data collection tools, data analysis, validity and reliability, ethical process of the research, and application subheadings should be included in detail.

The findings need to be reorganized. The findings obtained need to be interpreted. It is also recommended that the results obtained be supported by relevant studies.