

Review of: "Acacia pycnantha gum exudates recognised as a traditional food in two countries may have economic potential"

Tomás Alejandro Fregoso-Aguilar¹

¹ Instituto Politécnico Nacional

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

It's a short but interesting article, not least because it addresses the potential use as easily accessible and seemingly inexpensive food to process. My main suggestion is that the author could mention in a little more depth the nutritional properties of that species and the approximate content of the nutrients if they have already been studied.