Abstract:

The abstract is well written.

The citation style should be uniform for all the content. It switches between Vancouver and Harvard.

All the sentences containing quantitative information (stats, figures) should be separately cited instead of putting one common citation at the end of paragraphs.

All the grammatical errors should be removed.

The introduction has well established the rationale and need for the said study.

The methods are well written.

The exclusion criteria should be explained more, and medical conditions that pertain to organ donation should be mentioned.

The software for conducting the reliability and validity analysis should be mentioned, as well as a brief statistical plan.

Discussion is well written.
