

Review of: "Participatory budgeting for public involvement in environmental sustainability at a Thai university"

Roberto Falanga

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The paper has some potential. My main concerns relate to:

- definition of participatory democracy as an ideal (author may want to elaborate on that as this definition does not align with the scientific debate);
- definition of PB (key references in this field are missing) and to what extent the case study can be defined as such;
- originality of the results (author may want to examine more in depth the compilation of outputs and the positive appreciation of PB made by students)