

Peer Review

Review of: "Inequality Emerges from Networks"

Joao Ricardo Faria¹

1. Economics, Florida Atlantic University, United States

This article suggests that organizational networks are a key contributor to the origins of economic inequality. Even when all agents have identical abilities, network structure and market-driven efficiency pressures alone can generate significant inequality.

This paper introduces an original and engaging thesis, is clearly written, and provides robust and persuasive findings.

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.