

Review of: "Discourse on the Sugar-Sweetened Beverages Tax in Indonesia: The Multistakeholder and Consumers' Perspectives"

Piyush Gupta

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Overall a well conducted study that is well written too. My only area of concern (or perhaps ignorance) is regarding the results pertaining to the most frequently consumed SSBs in the target population. All over the world, SSBs consumed maximally are fruit drinks and carbonated beverages. To my surprise, these two beverages are not among the most popular choices in Indonesia. Need to discuss this major variation from the rest of the world. Is it because of their non-availability, some cultural factors, or local preferences? Another reason could be that the authors did not include them in the list while surveying. Need clarification on this point.