

Review of: "[Review Article] Melatonin, ATP, and Cataracts: The Two Faces of Crystallin Phase Separation"

Walter Balduini¹

¹ University of Urbino

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

In this review, the authors highlight the synergistic role of melatonin and ATP in cataract formation and suggest that cataract and glaucoma progression may be a reflection of an age-related decline in melatonin and ATP production that is exacerbated by exposure to light during the night. The review is well articulated, very well written, and interesting to read. This reviewer has no specific comments and believes that the manuscript can be published in its current form.