

Review of: "The Traumas of Displacement and Not Belonging"

David Blihar¹

¹ St. George's University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Abstract: well-written and concise

Introduction: excellent, if not exhaustive, background information.

Discussion: Appropriate deep dives and applications into and of cultural examples of trauma.

Overall: Taken into context that this is not an experiment, this is a wonderful examination of cultural significance and education. This paper's contribution to its relevant field is just that: cultural relativism and education. This paper is phenomenally well written and was an joy to read.