The article is well-structured and prepared for publication. I have noted the details considered relevant that should be taken into account by the authors.

I do not agree with the method and population as mentioned in the red comments in the attached paper.

The number of population does not accurately represent the social reality of the countries selected in this research.

The authors should suggest, based on the results, some recommendations in the paper.

These recommendations could include preventive health communication interventions aimed at mobilizing the target audiences (study population) to prevent harmful consumption.
