

Review of: "Women Empowerment: Policy Evidences from Ethiopia and Kenya"

Suaad Zayed AL-Oraimi¹

¹ United Arab Emirates University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

1. This paper did not add novel empirical data to feminist's research related to empowerment of women in Ethiopia and Kenya.
2. It's hard to put women from Ethiopia and women from Kenya together in the same situation. These women are related to different cultures, their circumstances and needs are also different.
3. It's not possible to examine the government's policy in Ethiopia and Kenya from the same perspective; the two countries have different social and economic formations. In this case, it's better to conduct comparative studies.
4. The authors indicated that the paper is based on a field research, but indeed, they relied on available data. They should listen to women; every single woman in her daily life has her own story to tell.
5. The authors were supposed to select a random sample from each country to conduct a study based on direct interviews and focus groups with women from both countries.
6. There is a clear overlap between the literature review and the findings of the study and there is no logical analysis.
7. The authors did not rely on new sources of information from Ethiopian and Kenyan governments about the empowerment of women.
8. The research is not suitable for publication, the authors should conduct an empirical field research