The authors present a relevant research theme by posing in the abstract two questions as their approach to “collaborate with the planting and reforestation of the Amazon”. “How can art and design be a means of raising awareness for environmental activism in the Amazon?” and “How (do) memory technologies help environmental activism?”

The readers of a scientific article would expect that these two questions would be detailed in the article with an explanation of how the authors define their main concepts, such as reforestation of the Amazon, art and design, environmental activism, and memory technologies. Previous studies from a literature review should support these definitions and the two answers, guiding the manuscript to a conclusion explaining how the authors' artistic work could also respond to these issues.

A thorough review by a native English speaker is crucial to facilitate the reading.
