

Review of: "The equality agenda: a clear case of smoke and mirrors"

María Dolores de Miguel¹

¹ Universidad Politécnica de Cartagena

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The historical journey that is made in this work is very interesting, it reflects the effects and the conceptions of the people, the different interpretations and applications of the policies elaborated by experts so that the political leaders implement them, in this story it has been shown that the smoke, as a matter of equality, lingers.

Perhaps this work lacks a somewhat more empirical contribution, with data that reflects how the legislations, through their equality agendas, laws, decrees, etc., have impacted on society, allowing compliance with equality, both access to education and decent work, as well as professional promotions that reflect that meritocracy has been applied regardless of race, age, sex, and religion.