The submitted document presents the initial analysis and results. The paper is not ready for journal publication and needs to consider the following:

1. Although the title looks interesting, the paper's content focuses on technological aspects, leaving the proposed solution in the second plane.
2. The abstract lacks the paper's purpose. It does not mention the presented solution.
3. The introduction contains misspelled sentences. This situation suggests more attention to detail.
4. The authors barely mention the solution up to chapter 3. The solution development is not understandable if the reader doesn't manage technical language.
5. The conclusions chapter mentions only technical aspects thoroughly known but does not include relevant considerations about the proposed solution.
